(Opposite St. Paul's Church-yard, a few doors west of Broadway.)

"Book Catalogues are to men of letters what the compass and the lighthouse are to the mariner, the rail-road to the merchant, the telegraph wires to the editor, the digested index to the lawyer, the pharmacopœia and the dispensatory to the physician, the sign-post to the traveller, the screw, the wedge, and the lever, to the mechanic; in short, they are the labor-saving machines, the concordances, of literature." ..... Western Memorabilia.

"I have friends whose society is delightful to me, they are persons of all countries, and of all ages; distinguished in war, in council, and in letters; easy to live with, always at my command. They come at my call, and return when I desire them. They are never out of humour, and they answer all my questions with reading. Some present in review before me the events of past ages; others reveal to me the secrets of nature. These teach me how to live, and those how to die: these dispel my melancholy by their mirth, and amuse me by their sallies of wit; and some there are who prepare my soul to suffer every thing, to desire nothing, and to become thoroughly acquainted with itself. In a word, they open the door to all the arts and sciences. As a reward of such great services, they are only a corner of my little house, where they may be safely sheltered from the envy of their enemies. In fine, I carry them with me into the fields, the silence of which suits them better than the business and tumults of cities." ..... Petrarch.

"I have heard him (Bishop M'Ilvaine) preach but once, and that was in St. Jude's Church, Sixth Avenue, New York. He is the only Episcopal clergyman that I have ever heard preach extemporaneous, with the exception of Bishop Henshaw, of Rhode Island, and I have heard many, both in Great Britain and America. He is plain in appearance, and in manner earnest, fervent, and impressive—full of his subject—a God serving preacher. He resembles what we might suppose Thomas A. Kempis, Pascal, and Fenelon were in the Roman Catholic Church, Bishops Taylor and Beveridge, Thomas Scott and Mr. Piteairn in the Episcopal Church, Boston, Rutherford and the Erskines in the Presbyterian Church, and Owen, Baxter, Goodwin, and Colamy among the Nonconformists. Any work from his pen must be possessed of great value to his fellow men."—Western Memorabilia.

- This is perhaps the first attempt at writing English poetry in the New World; at all events, it is without doubt the first translation of a classic author into the English tongue. Sandys was colonial secretary for the Virginia Plantations during the time he made this translation of Ovid. In his dedication to Charles 1st, he speaks thus of his performance:—"We had hoped, ere many years had turned about, to have presented you with a rich and well-peopled kingdom; from whence, now, with myself, I only bring this composure: Inter victrices Hederam tibi serpere Laurus. It needeth more than a single denization, being a double stranger. Sprung from the stock of ancient Romanes, but bred in the New World, of the rudeness whereof it cannot but participate; especially having wars and tumult to bring it to light instead of the muses."
